FORD FAMILIES NEED NO CHARITY NOR WELFARE WORKERS

Harvester Trust's Two-Dollars-a-Day Employees Require Much "Welfare" Charity—Comparing the Conditions at the Two Plants

Concluding Chapter of Special Survey of the Ford Auto Plant and The Harvester Trust Plant.

BY A SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR

Detroit, Mich., April 17.—"Not a single man of all the 15,000 Ford employes is receiving, or needs, charitable aid from the city of Detroit!"

Superintendent Thomas E. Dolan of the Detroit Poor Commission answered thus when asked to tell what the $5-a-day wage paid by Henry Ford to his unskilled laborers had meant to the community of which they formed part:

"Most factories," Dolan said, "are just so many festering sores in the body of the city. Around them a fringe of filthy, disease-breeding tenements eats its way into the healthy tissue of the community, poisoning both the slum people themselves and the rest of the population. But it's different around the Ford plant."

Now let us go out to the neighborhood of the Ford plant.

Again and again, Anton, or Mike, or whatever his name may be, leads us, his visitors, with a mysterious smile, to a certain door, which he flung open. And revealed—a clear
